the most common cause of the disease is a deficiency of the blood, which is often the result of a general debility of the system, and which may be caused by a variety of factors, such as a poor diet, a sedentary life, or a disease of the stomach or bowels.
The symptoms of the disease are a general debility of the system, a loss of appetite, a loss of weight, a loss of strength, and a loss of vitality.
The treatment of the disease is to restore the blood to its normal state, and to strengthen the system.
This may be done by a change of diet, by
a change of life,
or by the use of
medicines which will restore the blood to its normal state, and strengthen the system.
